

MARK SCHEME for the May/June 2012 question paper for the guidance of teachers

9084 LAW

9084/43

Paper 4, maximum raw mark 75

This mark scheme is published as an aid to teachers and candidates, to indicate the requirements of the examination. It shows the basis on which Examiners were instructed to award marks. It does not indicate the details of the discussions that took place at an Examiners' meeting before marking began, which would have considered the acceptability of alternative answers.

Mark schemes must be read in conjunction with the question papers and the report on the examination.

- Cambridge will not enter into discussions or correspondence in connection with these mark schemes.

Cambridge is publishing the mark schemes for the May/June 2012 question papers for most IGCSE, GCE Advanced Level and Advanced Subsidiary Level syllabuses and some Ordinary Level syllabuses.

Assessment Objectives

Candidates are expected to demonstrate:

Knowledge and Understanding recall, select, use and develop knowledge and understanding of legal principles and rules by means of example and citation

Analysis, Evaluation and Application

analyse and evaluate legal materials, situations and issues and accurately apply appropriate principles and rules

Communication and Presentation

use appropriate legal terminology to present logical and coherent argument and to communicate relevant material in a clear and concise manner.

Specification Grid

The relationship between the Assessment Objectives and this individual component is detailed below. The objectives are weighted to give an indication of their relative importance, rather than to provide a precise statement of the percentage mark allocation to particular assessment objectives.

Assessment Objective	Paper 1	Paper 2	Paper 3	Paper 4	Advanced Level
Knowledge/ Understanding	50	50	50	50	50
Analysis/ Evaluation/ Application	40	40	40	40	40
Communication/ Presentation	10	10	10	10	10

Mark Bands

The mark bands and descriptors applicable to all questions on the paper are as follows. Maximum mark allocations are indicated in the table at the foot of the page.

Indicative content for each of the questions follows overleaf.

Band 1:

The answer contains no relevant material.

Band 2:

The candidate introduces fragments of information or unexplained examples from which no coherent explanation or analysis can emerge.

OR

The candidate attempts to introduce an explanation and/or analysis but it is so fundamentally undermined by error and confusion that it remains substantially incoherent.

Band 3:

The candidate begins to indicate some capacity for explanation and analysis by introducing some of the issues, but explanations are limited and superficial.

OR

The candidate adopts an approach in which there is concentration on explanation in terms of facts presented rather than through the development and explanation of legal principles and rules.

OR

The candidate attempts to introduce material across the range of potential content, but it is weak or confused so that no real explanation or conclusion emerges.

Band 4:

Where there is more than one issue, the candidate demonstrates a clear understanding of one of the main issues of the question, giving explanations and using illustrations so that a full and detailed picture is presented of this issue.

OR

The candidate presents a more limited explanation of all parts of the answer, but there is some lack of detail or superficiality in respect of either or both so that the answer is not fully rounded.

Band 5:

The candidate presents a detailed explanation and discussion of all areas of relevant law and, while there may be some minor inaccuracies and/or imbalance, a coherent explanation emerges.

Maximum Mark Allocations:

Section A

- 1 An award of damages in tort is based on the principle of restitutio in integrum (restitution in full). Critically assess the extent to which this aim of the principal remedy in tort is achieved.

An award of damages in tort aims to compensate claimants for actual losses suffered; restitutio in integrum means restoration in full and the aim is to put a claimant in the position (s)he would have been in had the tort not been committed. Restoration in full may necessitate awards of general damages for losses arising naturally from the tort and special damages which have been claimed in particular because the loss is not a natural result of the tort in question.

Pecuniary and non-pecuniary losses may be subject to an award of damages. The former, which are financial, are easier to calculate than the latter, but even when losses are purely financial, the issue of what amounts to restitutio in integrum is not always straightforward; disagreements between first instance and appeal decisions were very evident in Gardner v Marsh & Parsons and South Australia Asset Management Corporation v York Montague Ltd. Issues of over-compensation also arise (Parry v Cleaver; Longden v British Coal) as does the issue of lump sum payments in cases where the true effects of a loss are not felt until after an award has been made (Pearson Commission (1978) recommendations might be referred to here).

Fault ought also be discussed. Compensation by way of damages does not take degree of fault into account.

Candidates are expected to draw clear conclusions, summing up with a concise assessment of how far they feel that the aim of restitutio in integrum is achieved. Some critical analysis is necessary to achieve Band 4 or 5.

- 2 That wrongdoers should be liable for their own actions is a fundamental principle on which the law of tort is based. Critically analyse how the concept of vicarious liability might seem to contradict this principle and explain why it is deemed necessary.

Candidates should define vicarious liability – liability for torts committed by others. It should then be explained that liability is not removed from the tortfeasor, but rather that liability becomes joint and that the claimant is free to sue either party. It is a situation which most commonly arises during the course of employment: employers can be held vicariously liable for the action of their employees whilst at work.

One reason for imposing such liability is that employers control the acts of employees and should be liable for them. This may have been true in the past, but to what extent is this true today? For example, what actual control can hospitals exercise in respect of highly skilled, specialist surgeons? However, if targets and work-loads are set, such that even specialist work cannot be done properly is the imposition of vicarious liability justifiable?

Also, in the majority of cases, it will be the employer who will be in the best financial position to meet a claim, either because of resources or insurance cover. Inevitably, such losses get passed on to consumers through higher prices for goods or services. Does this argument thus stand up to scrutiny?

Some evidence suggests that imposition of liability encourages employers to check that their employees do their work carefully. Would this happen if such liability did not exist and costs had to be reduced?

Candidates must approach this issue with a critical eye if marks in band 4 and 5 are to be awarded.

- 3 'There is no need for the torts of trespass to land and private nuisance to co-exist as they both protect the same interests'. Compare the elements of these torts and explain the extent to which you agree with this statement.

The question requires candidates to look at the similarities and differences between these two torts that affect interests in land.

Both torts must be defined by candidates and those definitions should be explained. Responses should entail consideration of the following as a starting point:

Trespass to Land

Involves a direct, physical interference with the possession of land

Technically actionable per se

Justifies a series of legal actions as long as it lasts

Isolated incidents suffice to give rise to a cause of action

Reasonableness of act of no consequence; even if in ignorance, liability arises

Private Nuisance

Involves an indirect interference with the enjoyment or use of land in another's possession

Only actionable on proof of actual loss

Generally needs to be continuous state of affairs to give rise to a cause of action

Interference must be substantial to give rise to liability

Must be an unreasonable interference

Candidates must draw proper comparisons (listings of points will not suffice) and reasoned conclusions if marks in band 4 and beyond are to be awarded.

Section B

- 4 Advise Joyanna of the likely success of any action brought against Adam to recover losses and costs incurred as a consequence of the incident with the digger.

Some discussion of general principles of negligence is pertinent and should receive some credit (but not beyond band 3).

The focus in this instance is clearly the compensation of the victim and requires discussion of the principles of remoteness of damage and of liability in negligence for pure economic losses.

For any loss to be recoverable in an action in tort, that loss must not be so remote from its cause that it was not a reasonably foreseeable consequence of that cause (The Wagon Mound; Hughes v Lord Advocate). Candidates must make an assessment here. Were the losses, in essence, reasonably foreseeable? Candidates might consider the courts approach in Page v Smith, Margereson v J W Roberts Ltd and Brown v Lewisham & North Southwark Health Authority in support of argument. More specifically, however, candidates should recognise the significance of the decided case of Spartan Steel & Alloys Ltd v Martin.

The issue of pure economic loss can be illustrated through case law (e.g. Weller & Co, Spartan Steel, Junior Books).

Page 6	Mark Scheme: Teachers' version	Syllabus	Paper
	GCE A LEVEL – May/June 2012	9084	43

The law of tort distinguishes between losses suffered as a result of damage to person or property and those of a purely economic nature where no such damage has occurred. In the case of pure economic loss, the courts have been reluctant to allow claims. So what of this case?

In respect of the losses arising from closure of the shop, since there is no physical damage to any person or to the shop, the loss suffered by Joyanna is purely economic and in principle not recoverable.

In respect of the computer it can be questioned whether damage to the computer system (e.g. the loss of data) is to be regarded as physical damage so that consequential economic loss would be recoverable subject to principles of remoteness.

Clear, concise and compelling conclusions should be drawn by candidates.

5 Advise Len, Elsie and Josh as to their respective rights and liabilities in the tort of negligence.

Candidates should contextualise their responses by identifying negligence and nervous shock as the key issues. Negligence essentials of duty of care, breach and causation should be discussed in detail as the scenario does not indicate with certainty that negligence has definitely taken place. The focus of the response should be the liability of the defendant, Josh, for the injuries of one of the rescuers, Len and for nervous shock sustained by his sister Elsie.

Candidates need to decide whether Josh has been negligent when setting out in territory known to be potentially dangerous without taking map, compass or GPS equipment with him.

With regard to Len's injuries, the special case of rescuers in the torts of negligence must be explored, where the injuries sustained are a consequence of deliberate or negligent acts as would seem to be the case here. Cases such as Smith v Baker, ICI v Shatwell, and Kirkham v Chief Constable of Greater Manchester might be considered.

Candidates should distinguish between primary and secondary victims of negligence and conclude which category Elsie falls into. Nervous shock should be defined and the principles on which liability rests as regards secondary victims should be identified and explained: relevant class of person, own sight, hearing of incident or its immediate aftermath, means by which shock received.

Elsie is a relative, so the Alcock requirement of a tie of love and affection should be discussed. However the issue here is the means by which he learned of the accident. In Alcock it was suggested that clearly identifiable live pictures might satisfy the proximity requirement.

Some credit may be awarded for a discussion of vicarious liability in relation to Barchester College and Josh.

Whatever conclusions are reached they should be clear, compelling and fully supported.

	GCE A LEVEL – May/June 2012	9084	43

6 Discuss the potential liability of Victor and Ulysses in the tort of trespass to the person arising from these incidents.

Candidates should set their response in context by explaining that the trespass to the person takes three forms: assault, battery and false imprisonment. Candidates should offer clear, concise definitions and brief explanations of each.

Candidates should then address the potential issues arising from the facts of the scenario.

Could Victor's verbal abuse amount to an assault? In what context can words constitute an assault? (Thomas v National Union of Mineworkers.) Could Victor's menacing words accompanied by his attempt to get on to the pitch put Willy in sufficient fear for it to amount to an assault?

Did Ulysses cause a battery to Victor when he grabs hold of him: was it deliberate, illegal and 'forceful'? The issue then arises as to whether or not Ulysses falsely imprisons Victor, when he locks him in the room – or could this merely amount to a citizen's arrest? This would appear to have been his intent, but was there any reasonable means by which Victor could have escaped from the room had he so wished?

When Victor is walking through the car park he sees Willy and proceeds to punch him in the face. Is this a battery?

The principles must be applied to the scenario and clear, compelling conclusions drawn.
